The House At The End Of The Street

Emily has trouble with her husband Gareth. Although she is both intelligent and beautiful, she lives with an embarrassing medical condition: Emily has Tourette syndrome. Thinking that Gareth therefore has all the power in their marriage, Emily allows him to treat her like the proverbial doormat. Emily's son Reid also has Tourette syndrome. Academic problems and bullies make school a living hell. Only the support of his friends, other "weirdos" like him, makes it bearable. They plot revenge against the bullies. In a high achieving town where many consider only an Ivy League education acceptable, Reid wonders where a place in the world exists for someone like him. Emily accidentally enters an alternate dimension where she meets Terran. Compassionate, God-like, yet blinded by her fiery beauty, he becomes her spiritual teacher. Only someone with a life mission as important as hers, Terran says, can enter his dimension. Reid and Emily's increasing prophetic visions lead them to healing in ways that they never expect.

A lot of plot

There are stories within the story in this book. What I liked most about it is the author kept it real, the kids in this book are like yours, mine or the neighbors and there's a healthy dose of learning to be more open minded and most of all kind.

The House At Pooh Corner

Wonderful

I loved this book. Was so anxious for Emily to be healed. She may not have healed her Tourette syndrome, but she healed herself spiritually. I wish there was a continuation of the book. Thank you for a wonderful story.
